Once, there was a king who owned many kinds of animals, but he did not have a great horse. So he commanded his servants to go and find the fastest horse in the land. They searched for months, but they returned without success.

One day, a servant named Zan heard about a very fast horse in another country. He asked for permission to travel there, and the king agreed. Sadly, when he arrived, he learned that the horse had died. But Zan had an idea. He bought the horse's head for five hundred pieces of silver.

When Zan returned, the king was furious. "You paid five hundred pieces of silver for this?" the king shouted. "What good is it to me? I want a living horse, you fool!" "Please be patient, my king," the servant said. "When people hear how much you paid for the head of a dead horse, they will think you will pay an enormous amount for living one! People from around the world will bring their horses to you!"

That's just what happened. Almost immediately, people all over the world started bringing their fast horses. The king was delighted, and he soon found exactly the horse he wanted.

A mother-in-law was very cruel to her daughter-in-law. She made the girl do all the housework. Despite that, she always shouted at her and told her that everything she did was wrong. The daughter-in-law was so frightened of her mother-in-law that she ate almost nothing. When she did try to eat some small bit of food, her mother-in-law would accuse her of being greedy and taking food from others in the house.

On New Year's Day, the family always ate a special rice dumpling soup called dok guk*. The girl put the soup on the table, and as soon as the family started eating she returned to the kitchen. The smell of the soup was so delicious that it made her mouth water, and she was so hungry that she couldn't resist tasting it. She had just put a hot dumpling into her mouth when the mother-in-law entered and shouted, "You greedy woman!" She was so surprised that she choked on the dumpling, fell over, and died.

As she was being buried, a cuckoo flew over the grave singing its sad song. The family thought the bird was saying "Dok guk! Dok guk!" and believed that the daughter-in-law had changed into a bird.

The king of Wei decided to build a tower that would reach halfway to the sky. He ordered that anyone who criticized the idea be executed. Everyone knew it was insane, but they were afraid to speak.

One day, a wise old man named Wan went to see the king. He said he had come to help.

The king laughed. What help could a weak old man give? Wan offered to make plans for the tower. The king agreed.

Wan explained that the distance from the ground to the sky was about 24,000 kilometers. So the tower was going to be 12,000 kilometers tall. The foundation for such a tall building would have to be 4,800 kilometers around. That was larger than the country of Wei! So the king would have to attack a country near them to get more land. After conquering that country, the king would need at least 100,000 workers to build the tower. They would all need to eat. There might be a problem getting enough food for them all.

When Wan finished, the king sat silently. Wan left the palace, and from that time on, nothing more about the tower was heard again.
